

Analysis of Case Processing Performance in the Court of Appeals

September Term, 2014

Introduction

The Court of Appeals adopted case time standards effective for its September Term, 2013 (the period spanning September 1, 2013 through August 31, 2014). The case processing goals adopted by the Court provide that all cases argued¹ (or filed, depending on the appeal type) during a Term are to be decided before the Term's completion. This goal is similar to that followed by the U.S. Supreme Court, and is an expansion of the Judiciary's commitment, which began in the trial courts, to ensure timely adjudication for all those with business before the courts.

This report contains performance results against the Court's case time standards for September Term, 2014.

Methodology

Case processing performance in the Court of Appeals is based on all cases argued (or filed for certain types of appeals) during the Court's September Term, 2014.² The Court's case time standards begin at the date of argument for appeals on its Regular Docket, Certified Questions of Law, and Attorney Grievance Cases, and at filing for Extraordinary Writs and Bar Admissions. See Appendix A for the complete table of case time standards in the Court of Appeals.

Data on the number of cases argued or filed were obtained from the Clerk of the Court of Appeals upon conclusion of the September Term, 2014, from the Court's docket sheets. Pertinent data fields were individually extracted and transferred to customized data collection forms. Data included: Case Number, Caption (Case Title), Argument Date, Filing Date, and Disposition Date (opinion, dismissal, or other order/disposition). Upon completion of entry into the data collection forms, dates were cross-checked with the original paper files to verify their accuracy.

The number and percentage of appeals disposed within-standard are a proportion of the total number of cases argued or filed (depending on the appeal type) during the Court's September Term, 2014. Average and median case processing times for all disposed cases were also computed.

² The Court disposed of a number of cases during the period examined (September 1, 2014 through August 31, 2015) that did not contain an argument. These cases were not subject to this analysis.

Overall Performance Results

The Court of Appeals achieved the case time standard goal in each of the appeal types during the September Term, 2014. All 70 Regular Docket cases were disposed within the Term and took an average of 79 days from argument to disposition (Similar to Term 2013). The next largest number of cases were Extraordinary Writs, in which all 47 filed within September Term, 2014 reached disposition, and took an average of 15 days from filing to disposition.

All fourteen Attorney Grievance appeals that contained an argument were decided within the Term and took an average of 14 days from argument to disposition. There were two Bar Admission appeals filed in the Court in September Term, 2014, and each was disposed within that Term, taking an average 24 days from filing to disposition. The last type of appeal was Certified Questions of Law, of which there were three. Each of these appeals was disposed within the Term and took an average of 55 days from argument to disposition.
